Musical Style and Performance

The musical numbers in the film are eclectic and stylized, combining rock and roll with theatrical flair. While many appreciate this blend, others find the songs repetitive or overly theatrical, which can detract from their enjoyment of the movie. The performances, particularly the exaggerated acting style, may also be perceived as excessive or distracting.

Visual and Production Choices

The film's low-budget production values, including its makeup, costumes, and set design, contribute to its camp aesthetic. While celebrated by many for its progressive stance, these elements can make some viewers uncomfortable or disapprove of the film's messages.

Taboo and Shock Value

The movie intentionally incorporates shock elements, including provocative costumes, suggestive dialogue, and risqué scenes. This shock value is part of what made it a cult phenomenon but can also be off-putting or offensive to those who prefer more conventional or family-friendly entertainment.
