The History of Tiger Management

Tiger Management was founded in 1980 by Julian Robertson, who started with an initial capital of $8 million. The hedge fund quickly gained prominence due to Robertson's rigorous research and disciplined trading strategies. Over the next decade, Tiger Management grew exponentially, managing billions of dollars at its peak. The firm was known for its long/short equity approach, leveraging deep fundamental analysis to identify undervalued stocks while shorting overvalued ones. By the mid-1990s, Tiger Management was one of the largest hedge funds globally, earning Robertson a reputation as one of the most successful investors of his time.

Founding and Early Growth

Julian Robertson began his career on Wall Street with a background in finance and a passion for stock picking. His early experience at firms like Kidder, Peabody & Co. provided him with the expertise to launch Tiger Management. The fund's initial success was driven by Robertson's ability to capitalize on market inefficiencies and his willingness to invest in emerging technology and growth companies. This period marked the foundation for what would become a highly influential hedge fund.

Peak and Challenges

During the 1990s, Tiger Management's assets under management (AUM) soared to approximately $22 billion. Robertson's bullish stance on tech stocks and global markets contributed to significant gains. However, the late 1990s and early 2000s brought challenges as the dot-com bubble burst. Despite early warnings, Tiger Management suffered losses that eventually led to the firm's closure in 2000. Nonetheless, the fund's impact on hedge fund strategies and the industry was profound and lasting.

Julian Robertson's Investment Philosophy

The cornerstone of Julian Robertson Tiger's success lies in its founder's disciplined and research-driven investment philosophy. Robertson emphasized rigorous fundamental analysis, focusing on companies with strong management, sustainable competitive advantages, and attractive valuations. His approach combined long positions in undervalued stocks with short sales of overvalued or deteriorating companies, creating a balanced portfolio aimed at delivering superior risk-adjusted returns.

Long/Short Equity Strategy

Julian Robertson was a pioneer of the long/short equity strategy, which involves buying stocks expected to increase in value while shorting those anticipated to decline. This approach allowed Tiger Management to profit in various market conditions and reduce exposure to systemic risk. Robertson's method was to identify macro and microeconomic trends affecting industries and companies, using proprietary research to make investment decisions.

Focus on Management Quality and Corporate Governance

One of Robertson's key investment criteria was the quality of a company's management team. He believed that strong leadership was essential for a company's long-term success. Tiger Management often engaged with corporate management to encourage transparency and shareholder-friendly policies. This focus on governance differentiated the firm from many contemporaries and contributed to identifying companies with sustainable growth prospects.

The Impact of Tiger Management on the Hedge Fund Industry

Tiger Management's influence extends beyond its operational years, shaping the hedge fund industry's evolution. Julian Robertson's success demonstrated the potential for hedge funds to generate significant alpha through active management and sophisticated strategies. The firm's culture of rigorous analysis and risk management set new standards for hedge fund operations globally.

Innovations in Hedge Fund Strategies

Tiger Management popularized the long/short equity strategy and emphasized the importance of fundamental research combined with macroeconomic insights. This approach inspired a generation of hedge fund managers to adopt similar techniques, contributing to the diversification and sophistication of the hedge fund industry. Additionally, Robertson's willingness to invest internationally opened new avenues for global investment strategies.

Risk Management Practices

Robertson was known for his conservative risk management, avoiding excessive leverage and emphasizing position sizing. Tiger Management's risk controls helped the firm navigate volatile markets and avoid catastrophic losses. This prudent approach influenced industry best practices and underscored the importance of balancing risk and return in hedge fund management.

The Legacy of Julian Robertson: The Tiger Cubs

After closing Tiger Management in 2000, Julian Robertson devoted significant energy to mentoring a new generation of hedge fund managers known as the "Tiger Cubs." These protégés inherited Robertson's investment principles and went on to establish some of the most successful hedge funds in the industry. The Tiger Cubs network represents a powerful legacy of Robertson's influence on modern investing.

Who Are the Tiger Cubs?

The Tiger Cubs are former Tiger Management employees and analysts who launched their own hedge funds after the firm's closure. Notable Tiger Cubs include Chase Coleman of Tiger Global Management, Steve Mandel of Lone Pine Capital, and Andreas Halvorsen of Viking Global Investors. Each of these funds has achieved remarkable success, building on the foundation laid by Robertson's mentorship and investment philosophy.
