Overview of the LDS General YW Presidency

The LDS general YW presidency is the highest leadership council for the Young Women organization within the LDS Church. This presidency serves under the direction of the Church's First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. Its primary focus is to provide spiritual guidance and developmental resources for young women globally. The presidency includes a president and two counselors who collaborate to create curriculum, training materials, and inspirational messages. Together, they ensure that the Young Women program aligns with the Church's doctrines and objectives.

Composition and Structure

The LDS general YW presidency typically consists of three women: one president and two counselors. These leaders often have extensive experience in church service and a deep commitment to youth development. The presidency works closely with the Young Women general board and other church departments to coordinate activities and policies. Their leadership extends to training local Young Women leaders, organizing worldwide events, and overseeing the implementation of church-wide programs.

Global Reach

Because the LDS Church has a worldwide membership, the general YW presidency's influence spans diverse cultures and regions. They provide resources in multiple languages and adapt programs to meet the unique needs of young women across various countries. This global perspective ensures that the Young Women program remains inclusive and relevant.

Historical Development of the Young Women Presidency

The LDS general YW presidency has evolved significantly since the establishment of the Young Women organization in the 19th century. The organization was originally founded to support young women's spiritual growth and moral development, and leadership roles have adapted over time to meet changing needs and circumstances.

Origins of the Young Women Organization

The Young Women organization was established in 1869 by Brigham Young under the original name "Young Ladies' Department of the Cooperative Retrenchment Association." Its purpose was to help young women live virtuous lives and develop faith in Jesus Christ. Early leadership was local, but as the Church expanded, a general presidency was formed to provide unified direction.

Evolution of the General Presidency

Over the years, the structure and responsibilities of the LDS general YW presidency have been refined. Initially, leadership was limited and less formalized, but by the 20th century, the general presidency became a recognized and essential element of the Church's global youth programs. The presidency has continually adapted its approaches, including modernizing curriculum and embracing technology to connect with young women worldwide.

Roles and Responsibilities of the LDS General YW Presidency

The LDS general YW presidency carries a broad range of duties aimed at nurturing the spiritual and personal growth of young women. Their responsibilities require thoughtful planning, coordination, and communication with various church entities.

Spiritual and Instructional Leadership

One of the primary roles of the LDS general YW presidency is to provide spiritual direction. This includes developing lesson materials, organizing devotional events, and offering counsel that aligns with LDS doctrines. They strive to help young women strengthen their testimonies and live gospel-centered lives.

Training and Support for Local Leaders

The presidency provides training resources and guidance for local Young Women leaders, such as bishops and ward Young Women presidents. This ensures consistency and quality in teaching and program implementation across wards and stakes. Regular training sessions, conferences, and informational materials are coordinated by the presidency.

Program Development and Oversight

The LDS general YW presidency oversees the design and execution of programs and initiatives that support young women's development. This includes the annual Mutual activities, Personal Progress program, and other efforts aimed at building faith, character, and service.
