Lincoln Financial Field, home to the Philadelphia Eagles, is a large outdoor stadium with a seating capacity exceeding 69,000. The venue transforms its layout for concerts, including Beyoncé's performances, to optimize sightlines and acoustics. The seating chart for concerts differs from football games, with the stage typically positioned at one end of the field. This configuration allows for a combination of field seats, lower and upper bowl sections, and club-level seating. Understanding the general layout of the stadium helps attendees anticipate where their seats will be relative to the stage and other key areas.

Stadium Sections and Levels

The stadium is divided into several distinct seating areas, each offering a different concert experience:

- Field Level: Seats located directly on the field, closest to the stage.
- Lower Bowl: Sections surrounding the field, offering good views and proximity.

- Club Level: Premium seating with added amenities.

Field Seats

These seats are typically arranged in rows on the turf and provide an immersive concert experience. However, field seats often come with limited legroom and are general admission or assigned depending on the ticket type.

Lower Bowl Sections
