Overview of Loyola Marymount University Art Therapy Program

The Loyola Marymount University art therapy program is designed to equip students with the skills necessary to utilize art as a therapeutic tool for individuals facing emotional, psychological, and developmental challenges. LMU offers a Master of Arts in Art Therapy and Counseling, which integrates counseling theory with creative arts methodologies to foster holistic healing. The program adheres to the standards set by the American Art Therapy Association and prepares graduates for credentialing as Registered Art Therapists (ATR) and Licensed Professional Clinical Counselors (LPCC) in California.

Program Mission and Objectives

The mission of the LMU art therapy program focuses on developing competent, ethical, and culturally responsive art therapists. Its objectives include fostering critical thinking in clinical contexts, promoting research in art therapy techniques, and encouraging advocacy for mental health through creative expression. Students are trained to work with diverse populations, including children, adults, and those with special needs.

Degree Options and Duration

LMU offers a graduate-level Master of Arts degree in Art Therapy and Counseling, typically completed over a two-year period for full-time students. Part-time study options may also be available to accommodate working professionals. The program balances academic coursework with practical experience to ensure well-rounded professional preparation.

Curriculum and Coursework

The curriculum of Loyola Marymount University art therapy emphasizes a multidisciplinary approach that incorporates psychology, human development, and visual arts. Students engage in rigorous academic study alongside experiential learning to develop therapeutic competencies.

Core Courses

Key courses in the program cover foundational knowledge and applied skills, such as:

- Introduction to Art Therapy Theory and Practice
- Human Growth and Development
- Psychopathology and Diagnosis
- Counseling Techniques and Strategies
- Art Therapy Techniques and Studio Practice
- Research Methods in Art Therapy
- Cultural Diversity and Ethics in Counseling

Studio and Creative Practice

In addition to theoretical coursework, LMU's art therapy program incorporates studio classes where students actively engage in various art media. This hands-on practice enhances their ability to guide clients through creative processes and develop individualized treatment plans.

Research and Thesis Requirements

Students are encouraged to conduct research that advances the field of art therapy. A thesis or capstone project is often required, enabling students to explore specialized topics such as trauma-informed art therapy or art therapy in community settings.

Admission Requirements and Application Process

The admission process for Loyola Marymount University art therapy emphasizes academic excellence, relevant experience, and alignment with the profession's values. Prospective students must fulfill specific prerequisites and submit comprehensive application materials.

Academic Prerequisites

Applicants typically need a bachelor's degree from an accredited institution. Background coursework in psychology, human development, or the arts is highly recommended to ensure preparedness for graduate-level study.

Application Materials

The application package generally includes:

- Completed application form
