During this era, the coaching role was often part-time and less formalized compared to modern standards, but these early leaders were instrumental in establishing the team's presence in collegiate football.

First Coaches and Program Beginnings

Ole Miss fielded its first football team in 1893, with coaches such as Alexander Bondurant and C.D. Clark taking early leadership roles. These pioneering coaches focused on introducing the sport to the university and competing regionally. While records from this period are sparse, their efforts set the stage for the program's growth.

Early Challenges and Growth

Harry Mehre, who coached from 1938 to 1946, brought experience from his time at the University of Georgia and contributed to the team's development during World War II.
