This recognition serves as a powerful recruitment tool, attracting top talent and enhancing employer branding. For employees, it validates their positive experiences and fosters a sense of pride. For employers, being listed signals a competitive advantage in the marketplace and encourages continuous improvement in workplace practices. The ranking also provides a benchmark for other companies striving to improve their organizational culture.

Selection Criteria and Evaluation Process

The selection process for the Pittsburgh Business Times Best Places to Work 2022 involves a comprehensive evaluation of both employee feedback and employer-submitted data. Companies interested in participating undergo a rigorous survey process designed to assess various dimensions of workplace quality. The evaluation emphasizes transparency, fairness, and accuracy to ensure that only the most deserving organizations are recognized.

Employee Survey

A core component of the evaluation is an anonymous employee survey that measures satisfaction across multiple categories, including:

- Workplace culture and environment
- Leadership effectiveness
- Compensation and benefits
- Professional development opportunities
- Work-life balance
- Diversity and inclusion initiatives

This survey provides critical insights into employees' genuine experiences and perceptions, which heavily influence the final rankings.

Employer Questionnaire

In addition to employee feedback, participating companies complete a detailed employer questionnaire. This submission includes information on human resources policies, workplace programs, and organizational practices that contribute to employee satisfaction and engagement. Factors such as wellness offerings, community involvement, and remote work support are among the areas evaluated. The combined data from both surveys allow the Pittsburgh Business Times to rank companies fairly and comprehensively.
