The group consisted of Lena Katina and Julia Volkova, who were presented as schoolgirls in a romantic relationship. This portrayal was a deliberate marketing tactic designed to attract attention and differentiate the group from other pop acts. Their debut single "All the Things She Said" featured a music video showing the two kissing in the rain, which sparked immediate debate and outrage in several countries.

Background and Formation

Initially assembled by producer Ivan Shapovalov, t.A.T.u was created with a provocative and controversial image in mind. The concept centered around the girls' supposed lesbian relationship, which was unusual and shocking in the conservative cultural environment of Russia at the time. The duo's image challenged societal norms and pushed boundaries regarding sexuality and youth culture in mainstream music.

First Signs of Controversy

The release of "All the Things She Said" in 2002 marked the beginning of international attention and controversy.
